

---

60% of males and 70% of females attending the world's largest gender clinic (GIDS) are same sex attracted.

---

In the 2015 statistics from GIDS, approximately 60% of the youth seen there who were biological males and 70% who were biological females reported attraction to the same sex or to both sexes. <sup>[1]</sup>

The 2015 Gender Identity Development Service (GIDS) statistics revealed a notably high rate of same-sex attraction among the youth seen at their clinic. Over half of the biological females reported same-sex attraction, about 20% were attracted to both sexes, and a quarter to the opposite sex, with the remaining identifying as asexual. Among biological males, approximately 30% reported same-sex attraction, another 30% to both sexes, 30% to the opposite sex, with the last 10% identifying as asexual or reporting no sexual attraction.

REFERENCES

Gender Identity Development Service. (n.d.). Gender identity and sexuality. [\[Link\]](#)

View original post and share on social media.